keygenQ: Map with overloaded insert and erase functions How can I specialize an `std::map` implementation so that it calls the overloaded erase or insert methods depending on whether or not my key is a pointer to a const object or a non-const object? A: Use an ordinary `std::map` and overload `operator[]`. A: You can still use a `std::map` or a `std::map_comp` based on your needs. A:
You can write a map that is not based on `operator[]`, but based on a member function. There are two primary advantages to using a map based on member functions: You get the map-like semantics. Insert and erase are nonconst, but if you want `operator[](const Key&)` to be const, it can be const; You can make different parameters const or non-const, depending on your needs. // typeahead.js // differential electrical connectors, the communication wires are pressed together in a parallel orientation. However, many differential electrical connectors include terminals that are in direct contact with the communication wires. The terminals provide the required electrical contact to the communication wires and strain relief for the wires. However, the terminals tend to capture at least a portion of the communication wires. As a result, the communication wires may move from the parallel orientation to an offset orientation with respect to each other. In the offset orientation, the terminals and the communication wires have contact interfaces that are not in direct physical contact. The offset orientation may reduce the transmission of data across the communication wires. In addition, the offset orientation may increase impedance that reduces the signal integrity of the communication signals. A need remains for a differential electrical connector having terminals with improved electrical contact interfaces to reduce impedance and improve signal integrity.
